Project Competition for Central European inventors at ValDeal Innovations

ValDeal Innovations organized a project competition presenting innovative ideas by Central European researchers and inventors to international investors. The event was held in Budaörs, on the 5th May, in the framework of the Central Europe Research to Innovation Models (CERIM) project. Owners of bright ideas from several Central European countries presented their inventions in 5 minutes' speeches in English highlighting the most important economic features of their ideas. "We give the possibility to innovative Central European technologies and their potential investors and distributors to get to know each-other and to build business and scientific relations" – said Zoltán Hantos, Senior Advisor of ValDeal Innovations.

ValDeal Innovations is the leading Hungarian company helping innovative entrepreneurs and inventors turn their creativity into business value. ValDeal has a proven track record in the commercialization of Hungarian inventions. The company also has an American joint venture helping the international commercialization of innovative projects and takes part in various international networks and consortia finding and growing promising innovations in Central and Eastern Europe.

The CERIM project (www.cerim.org)

The Central Europe Research to Innovation Models (CERIM) project aims to develop adapted valorisation models for a more effective and efficient technology transfer from the universities and research institutes in Central Europe. The long-term effects are to contribute to a stronger sector of knowledge intensive European companies and a revitalisation of markets through innovative companies. The project is implemented through the CENTRAL EUROPE Programme and co-financed by the European Regional Development Fund.
